First of all, Paul has declined his nomination to the Hall of Fame stating he doesn't feel he is worthy as he's not won the big one. In my humble opinion he's more than worthy with a 600+ winning percentage and 3 division titles in arguably the toughest division in the league, but I have to respect his wishes. Anybody with any comments, we'd love to hear from you. Secondly, it's a very quiet newsletter week so this will be very brief but just to let you all know I'm moving house, not sure when, after the New Year I hope but we may be without a newsletter for a turn or two whilst I get my new provider sorted out. I'll keep you all informed.

I'll try to sort out a preview of the season for the next newsletter which will be the last before Christmas but looking at pre-season the Yankees, Red Sox, D-Rays and Dodgers look hot whilst Pittsburgh look like they struggled immensely but the new season will sharp put that to right. Good luck everyone, hope you all have a great season.

LA Tribune

Just an introduction to myself. My name is Barry Andrews manager of the Dodgers in Mlb6 and Mets in Mlb7. I started playing about a year ago with the Mets towards the end of Season 12. I thoroughly enjoy the game and all the challenges within it. After presiding over an 18 game losing streak with the Mets at the end of Season 12 I began to doubt myself. However perversely that helped me as it sent me rapidly up the draft list to 5th. Mlb7 has now reached the playoffs at the end of Season 13 in which we finished 86-76 (a 31 game improvement as a team). With three weeks to go we were tied for the wildcard lead but a 10-17 finish ended those hopes. However I was very satisfied with my first full season in charge. As you know I have recently taken over the Dodgers despite my wife moaning about the amount of time I spend on these games. I was amazed when the history of the Dodgers under Kevin Reed came to my notice. How do i follow that!!!

In the season to come I hope to take the Dodgers back to a .500 record and see what else happens. We have a very good squad although we have had some retirements over the off season. I would suggest that Colorado would be favourites for the NL West despite our 21-6 preseason record. Looking forward to coming up against you in the season to come. I cannot believe that you have had two successive World Series losses both in the seventh game! (Take a closer look Barry, it's 3 in a row all 4-3..Kev)
